CORRESPONDENCE RELATING TO THE ATTACK ON RED BANK.

RED BANK, October 23d, 1777.

May it please your Excellency,

This will acquaint your Excellency, that early this morning, we carried all our gallies to action, and after a long and heavy firing we drove the enemy's ships down the river, except a 64 gun ship, and a small frigate, which we obliged them to quit, as they got on shore, and by accident the 64 gun ship blew up, and the frigate they set on fire themselves, took the people all out and quitted them. Our action lasted till twelve o'clock, and our fleet has received but very little damage. You will be informed of the glorious event of last night by Col. Green. We in our gallies were of great use in flanking round the fort. As I am very much fatigued, I hope your Excellency will be satisfied with this short account of our affairs of the river and fleet.

Being in haste, I hope soon shall have it in my power to give you a better account of this action; besides the sixty-four and frigate being burnt, the Roebuck, who lay to cover them, we damaged much, and drove off;

and had she lain fast, we should have had her in the same situation.

Am your Excellency's most obedient,
and very humble servant,

JOHN HAZELWOOD.

His Excellency Gen. Washington.

RED BANK, 23d October, 1777.

SIR:—By the desire of Col. Green, I congratulate your Excellency, on the success of the troops under his command, yesterday. On the 21st instant, four battalions of Germans, amounting to 1200 men, commanded by the Baron Donop, Col. Commandant, landed at Cooper's ferry, and marched the same evening to Haddonfield. At 3 o'clock yesterday morning, they marched for this place; when the guard at Timber-Creek Bridge were informed of their approach, they took up that bridge, and the enemy filed off to the left, and crossed at a bridge, four miles above. Their advanced parties were discovered within a quarter of a mile of the fort, at 12 o'clock; at half after four o'clock, P. M. they sent a flag to summon the fort, who was told, that it should never be surrendered. At three quarters after four they began a brisk cannonade, and soon after advanced in two columns, to the attack. They passed the abatis, gained the ditch, and some few got over the picquets, but the fire was so heavy that they were soon drove out again, with considerable loss, and retreated precipitately, towards Haddonfield.

The enemy's loss amounts to 1 Lieutenant Colonel, 3 Captains, 4 Lieutenants, and near 70 killed, and the Baron Donop, his Brigade Major, a Captain, Lieutenant, and upwards of 70 non-commissioned officers and privates, wounded and taken prisoners. We are also informed that several wagons are taken. He also enjoins me to tell your Excellency, that both officers and private men behaved with the greatest bravery. The action lasted 40 minutes, Col. Green's regiment has two sergeants, 1 fifer, and 4 privates killed, 1 sergeant, and 3 privates wounded, and one Captain, (who was reconnoitering) taken prisoner. Col. Angel has one Captain killed, 3 sergeants, 3 rank and file; and 1 ensign, 1 sergeant, and 15 rank and file wounded; 2 of Capt. Duplessis company were slightly wounded; too many handsome things cannot be said of the Chevalier, who as well as his officers shewed a truly heroic bravery.—There has been already brought into the fort near 300 muskets, a considerable number of swords, cartridge boxes, &c. There has been a smart firing between ours and the enemy's fleet this morning; several fire-ships have been sent down the river.

I am with the greatest respect,

Your Excellency's most obedient humble servant,

SAM. WARD.

His Excellency Gen. Washington.

RED BANK, 2 o'clock, Oct. 23, 1777.

SIR—I am just arrived at this place, on command from Fort Mifflin, and finding that Col. Green, and the Commodore were sending by Express to your Excellency, the glorious event of last evening, and this morning, think proper to give you the particulars from our garrison. This morning at half after six o'clock, the enemy, from Province Island, began a very heavy fire from their bomb-batteries, and in about half an hour after was joined by their fleet, which kept up on us incessantly, till after twelve o'clock. Our battery, in concert with the Commodore's fleet, playing on them the whole time; in short we ply'd them with 18 and 32 pound shot so closely, that they, I believe, began to give ground; however they ran a sixty-four gun ship and a twenty gun frigate a-ground, and after fruitless attempts to get them off, they set fire to them both. We sustained no damage, except a Captain and a private slightly wounded. Our garrison shewed a firmness and resolution becoming brave men, and I don't doubt will acquit themselves with honor. The fleet are making down fast, as low as Billingsport.

I have the honor to be, &c.

ROBERT BALLARD.

His Excellency Gen. Washington.

CHARLES THOMPSON, Secretary.

CANAL DOCUMENTS.

REPORT ON THE MONONGAHELA.

By EDW. F. GAY, Engineer.

The duty assigned me in relation to the Monongahela river will be seen by the following instructions.

That examinations, levels, and surveys be made along the valley of the Monongahela, from the Virginia state line to Pittsburg, with a view of determining the most eligible mode of effecting a communication either by canal or slackwater navigation. And that in contemplation of a slackwater navigation to report in addition to other proper and necessary matters, precise accounts of the number of dams and locks necessary to be erected, their respective dimensions and localities. The materials of which they should be constructed, and the plan, manner, and estimated expense of the same separately. And further, that the plan shall be so arranged, if practicable, as to preserve from injury the mill works and water power now in use on said river.

In compliance with the above instructions, my attention was necessarily first directed towards ascertaining the practicability of either, or both the improvements implied by them. Accordingly I visited the river at several points to ascertain its general character, and from my own observations, together with the information derived from many gentlemen of respectability who resided along the river, I became satisfied, and during the examination confirmed in the opinion, that a canal cannot be made along this valley at a reasonable expense, and therefore that it is unnecessary to make any examinations with reference to its particular cost. The reasons which induced this conclusion, will be seen as follows.

The banks of this river are, for nearly the whole distance examined, of a slippery nature. This characteristic is exhibited in the face of the hills to a dangerous extent. As these elevated bluffs are washed by the river about one-third of the distance, the flats or bottom lands which are often extensive, vary in height, from 20 to 50 feet above the river surface, their average may be placed at about 35 feet, and although apparently even in their general surface, yet our levels show that a canal line entering upon them at an elevation of 30 feet above the river, would very often unavoidably encounter cutting twenty feet in depth before arriving at their termination. This together with the necessity of passing the above mentioned treacherous bluffs on levels sufficiently elevated to place the canal on the flats, and the difficulty of introducing feeders into such elevated levels, would render the construction of a canal an item of serious expense. The construction of a towing-path along the river would also be attended with extraordinary expense; indeed so strong is the propensity of its banks to slip, for its whole extent, that the practicability of constructing a permanent towing path on either side, may be doubted. Having first satisfied myself with regard to the existence of these difficulties, I commenced at the Virginia state line, and continued my examinations solely with a view to an improvement of the steamboat navigation, believing also that its improvement would better answer the object desired than a canal. It may however here be well to institute a brief comparison between the advantages to be derived from a canal and those of a slack water navigation along this valley. An improvement here of any kind is intended to accommodate the country thro' which it passes, it follows there-

PENITENTIARY SYSTEM.

Observations and Reflections on the Penitentiary System.—A Letter from FRANKLIN BACHE, M. D., to ROBERTS VAUX.

Philadelphia, March 13th, 1829.

My Dear Sir—I regret very much that I have not been able, sooner, to reply to your letter of the 25th of January last, in which you pay me the compliment of requesting my opinion on the subject of the separate confinement of prisoners. The question which you propound is in these words:—"Is separate confinement a wise mode of treating prisoners." In the following observations, I shall endeavour to answer it to the best of my ability, according to the lights which I may possess.

It would seem to be the most direct way of coming to a solution of this question, to inquire what may be the evils of the gregarious confinement of prisoners, in order to determine whether their separate confinement would or would not remove them.

The evils of gregarious confinement are too manifold to be enumerated in the present letter; but the principal ones may be mentioned under the following heads:

1. Mutual countenance and contamination.
2. The fostering of bad passions and evil propensities, by living in a community, in which many of the crimes committed by the most depraved portion of society, living at large, are re-enacted.

3. The impossibility on the part of the best disposed prisoners, after being discharged, of avoiding the fellowship of the most abandoned, who may be privy to their disgrace.

4. The notoriety of the prisoner's disgrace to a large number of the most depraved members of society, which operates to deter his relatives and original friends, through pride, from giving him countenance and support.

1. Mutual countenance and contamination.

No one cause is a more fruitful source of the hardening of offenders, more particularly young offenders, than the countenance which they receive upon entering a community of convicts. We may imagine it possible, that a young convict, on entering a prison for the first time, may experience contrition, may have his feelings much subdued, and penetrated with a sense of his disgrace; but how altered is he in a short time. He is received with open arms by his new associates. If he continues to evince a subdued spirit, he is scoffed for betraying weakness; if his spirits begin to revive, he is sustained by narratives of successful knavery, by applauses bestowed on his criminal acts, or by exciting resentment in his breast for the alleged injustice or hardship of his case. How different may we suppose the progress of the feelings of the same individual, on entering a solitary cell. Instead of shaking off the salutary feelings with which he is supposed to enter the prison, they are enhanced. Instead of drowning the sense of his disgrace in noise, reckless mirth, and vicious conversation, the silence and loneliness of his cell, deepen the tone of his previous feelings. His heart sinks within him, and he has ample time to scan the course of his past life.

As it respects mutual contamination, it need hardly be remarked, that in a community of criminals, every member of it approaches to the state of the most depraved individual which it contains. There is no redeeming influence of the less criminal over the more hardened portion: all rapidly tend to grow worse. But this is not all; the sum total of vice is not merely increased; but if I may so speak, it is increased in intensity. Now all these evils are avoided by the separate confinement of the criminal, and at the same time, a positive good substituted; for I hold it as exceedingly probable, that a criminal becomes better, the very moment he is prevented from growing worse, as I cannot conceive him to remain stationary.

2. The fostering of bad passions, &c.

It is a well known fact, that many of the crimes committed by the depraved when at liberty, are perpetrated in prisons, under the system of gregarious confinement. Those that occur to me at this moment are murder, manslaughter, assault with intent to kill, maiming, perjury, theft, concealing stolen goods, gambling, &c. &c. There are also some crimes, which may be said to be peculiar to this kind of confinement. If then we were to concede for a moment, that the prisoner on his entrance, is not rendered worse by being cast into a community of criminals, still the facts mentioned above clearly show, that he has, in many instances, an opportunity of indulging his particular criminal propensities, just as if he were at large: the only difference is, that his sphere of operations is more circumscribed. In this manner, his bad passions and evil propensities are at least perpetuated, if not rendered more intensely active. What then becomes of the grand principle of moral discipline, the severing of depraved mental associations, and the breaking up of the influence of habit. It need not be added, that on the system of gregarious confinement, this principle cannot be brought into operation. Now all these evils disappear, on the system of separate confinement.

3. The impossibility on the part of the best disposed prisoners, &c.

This objection to gregarious confinement is, perhaps, as strong as any that I have urged. The situation of a prisoner on being discharged, who may be supposed to have formed a strong mental resolution to lead a reformed life, is truly deplorable. Claimed as a brother, both in misfortune and crime, by hardened offenders, and studiously shunned by the virtuous part of the community, if he remain firm to his resolution, he suffers every misfortune that could shake the strongest moral principle. He has no other resource than to hurry from the neighbourhood of his disgrace to some distant spot, where, being unknown, he will cease to be repelled by the good, and inveigled by the vicious. But what trials await, and dangers beset him in the attempt. His very efforts to change his course of life, give mortal offence to his hardened associates in disgrace; and he is compelled either to fraternize with them, or submit to become the victim of their resentment. If he still repels them, he is, in all probability, the subject of some false accusation, which consigns him once more to a prison; or if he escapes this greater misfortune, he is at least followed up with unrelenting perseverance, and the fatal secret of his disgrace made known wherever he may bend his steps.

It has been alleged, that the disadvantage arising from the notoriety of an individual's disgrace, cannot be removed by the separate confinement of prisoners; inasmuch as, the courts of law being open, his conviction may be known to the whole community. But this is arguing against the means of obtaining, to a very great extent, an important advantage for the prisoner, because that means cannot obtain the object in view, entirely and completely. For it must be obvious, that the
